Writing is a lonely job. Writing on loneliness could have been all the more so but for the active presence and encouragement of so many kind hearts to whom I am indebted.

Thanks are due:

- To that Supreme Spirit manifesting itself even in me.
- To my supervising guide, Dr. Thomas Palayoor, for his careful reading, his suggestions, his immense patience and kindness. Throughout the research, working with him has provided me an invigorating intellectual space.
- To Dr. C. J. Davees, who with his scholarly interest, friendly support, and gentle prodding, showed the way and identified the signposts in the long and tedious path through which this research meandered.
- To Dr. Joycee James, whose dedicated friendship remains one of the most cherished blessings in my life from my undergraduate days. This thesis owes much to her friendly prodding and editorial expertise.
- To the UGC for granting me teacher fellowship under FIP without which this thesis would have been practically impossible.
- To the Manager, and the Principal of St. Aloysius College, Elthuruth, for all the support, encouragement, and for the much needed leave to complete the thesis.
- To each and everyone of my colleagues at the Dept. of English, St. Aloysius College, for providing the most stimulating atmosphere to teach, to learn, and to be involved in research. Also, to all the teaching and non-teaching members in the various faculties of the college for the whole-hearted encouragement extended to me.
- To the Manager, and the Principal of St. Thomas College, Thrissur, for providing the infrastructure needed for the research.
- To the HOD, and the Dept. of English, St. Thomas College, Thrissur, for being ever helpful and encouraging.
- To all my fellow researchers at St. Thomas Research Centre and Dept. of English, especially Josepheni Joseph, Sr. Lijo, Sanil Raj, and Anto Thomas for the companionship, emotional support and intellectual inspiration.

- To the librarians and staff of:
 - St. Aloysius College, Elthuruth;
 - St. Thomas College, Thrissur;
 - IACIS, Hyderabad;
 - American Consulate, Chennai;
 - British Library, Chennai;
 - St. Joseph's Pontifical Seminary, Aluva;
 - Vimala College, Cheror;
 - St. Mary's College, Thrissur; and,
 - Public Library, Thrissur
- To my students, for the continual inspiration that they are to me.
- To Shri. Pauly Manjaly, for the printing and the binding.

And, to those who were instrumental in making me-the-person what I am...

- To my parents, Kunjipalu Paul Avaran and Chinnamma Paul for the love of learning instilled, for the independence of spirit nurtured, for always being there, and for all the love I feel.
- To my brothers, Bejoy and Benoj and their families.
- To my parents-in-law, Varghese Kallukaren and Kochuthresia Varghese for the care they take and the ambient atmosphere they provide at home.

One of the arguments this thesis puts forth is based on the finding that Stoppard asserts the need for individuals for social contact, co-operation and communion, though "the autonomy of the individual" is echoed "all over the place" in his writing ("1968"). Stoppard as an individual has given personal evidence to this through a very generous gesture. While doing research I had made attempts to make contacts with both Stoppard and Mamet. Stoppard has been, in spite of his understandably hectic schedule, kind enough to reply and has even sent me a signed card conveying best wishes for my project in his own handwriting. Many thanks to his kindness. I am thankful to both Stoppard and Mamet for having brought out such intriguing works of lasting worth to make this research possible and pleasurable.

And I am grateful to my husband, Ignatious, and my sons, George and Paul, for all the encouragement and support extended throughout my research.
