

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I would like to thank many teachers, colleagues and friends whose invaluable support and encouragement enabled me to bring this thesis into its present form. My gratitude to Dr. Thomas Palayoor, my research guide, for his reading of the draft with insight and care, and in giving required instructions from time to time.

My heartfelt thanks go to my colleague Dr. C.S. Biju for his reading of the final draft and making valuable suggestions. I am grateful to my colleague Dr. C.J. Davees for his assistance. I extend my gratitude to Fr. Devassy Panthaloorkaran, Principal, St Thomas' College and Dr. Bose Joseph, Head of the Dept. of English, St Thomas' College for their generous encouragement in bringing this thesis to a close.

I remember with gratitude my teacher late Dr. N. Natarajan who kindled my interest in literature.

My obsession with modern American poetry drove me to the unexplored poetics of the Black Mountain poets. Though their names are not frequently heard in the literary circles, these poets deserve attention along with the mainstream American writers. In India, we have similar movements and writers who are ignored, sidelined and marginalized even though their literary achievements are incomparable. I consider this thesis as the mouthpiece of the ‘unheard melodies’ of such writers.

I am indebted to USEFI (United States Education Foundation in India) for awarding me a Fulbright Doctoral and Research Fellowship which enabled me to continue my research at Thomas J. Dodd Research Center, University of Connecticut (UCONN) and similar research centres, archives, libraries and museums throughout the States. I am grateful to Melissa Watterworth, my academic advisor, for her genuine interest in my studies, guiding me through most of the Olson Papers and other Black Mountain documents housed at the Dodd Center, and in introducing me to a great many Black Mountain scholars. Thanks to Thomas Wilsted, Director, and other members of the staff of Thomas J. Dodd Research Center for permitting me to utilize the facilities available over there and to quote from their manuscript collections. I thank Prof. Ann Charters for sharing her experiences with the Black Mountain Poets and her personal views on the poet Charles Olson. Thanks to Prof. Donna Hollenberg, the Levertov scholar for her valid guidance from time to time. I thank Prof. Robert S. Tilton, Head of the Dept. of English, UCONN for all his help and encouragement, especially in granting me chances to make paper presentations. I thank Prof. Betty Hanson for her support, love and caring.

I want to thank Don and Nancy for hosting me at Asheville, North Carolina and taking me to the historic Black Mountain College buildings, and to different museums and archives and in introducing me to different people associated with Black Mountain, especially the upcoming Black Mountain poet Jeff Davis. I thank Alice Sebrel, Program Coordinator, Black Mountain College Museum and Arts Center (BMCAC), Asheville, NC for receiving me warmly at my arrival over there and in answering all my queries on every occasion.

I also want to thank the librarians of Homer Babbidge Library, UCONN and ASRC Library, Hyderabad. I thank V.C. John, librarian, St Thomas College Library and Raphy, librarian, English Dept. Library, St Thomas College. I thank Vibin Krishnan for proof reading and copy-editing the draft. I thank Pauly Manjaly for the final print out and binding.

Finally, I want to thank my wife Bindhu and my children Nevin and Nithun. Thanks a lot for your constant support and patience throughout the course of my research.
